countries within each region. The other countries are kept informed on the progress and the main outcomes of the programme, thus also enabling them to benefit from it.

A kick-off meeting and two back-to-back workshops were organized in each region in 2013, bringing together the relevant agencies and key CBRN experts and cultivating the creation of an inter-agency network.

A central element in preparing for incidents is the development of an exercise cycle in which individuals, organizations and structures can exercise to develop and improve necessary skills and knowledge. To be able to do this, a group of specialists were trained in the exercise cycle, the development of learning goals, designing tailor-made interagency exercise plans and leading their implementation. In 2014, these specialists will be supported through the project in developing scenarios and carrying out national and regional inter-agency exercises. By organizing these exercises themselves, the local ownership and the continuity of the inter-agency network within the participating countries will be guaranteed.

A digital communications platform has been developed to provide for an ongoing sharing of knowledge and practices among the countries' experts.

By the end of the programme, each participating country will have developed and carried out exercises to validate procedures and protocols in an inter-agency setting at a national level. The final conference will serve to disseminate countries' results and further stimulate regional cooperation. During this conference the participating countries will present the results of the national progress, including the exercise implementation plan and ideas for further international cooperation. The final conference will be combined with an inter-agency CBRN-response table top exercise that will be developed and organized by the partner countries and the consortium.
